

Socio-spatial framework for the analysis of second-homes in tourist areas

Myriam Colmenares¹

Abstract:

The diversity of tourist areas, including tourism highlights of second homes, needs to incorporate geography as a tool for the analysis, because in the tourist space various aspects converge: such as social, environmental, cultural, economic and political. In this sense, the holistic view of the geography with the social analysis is what makes us closer to understand the tourist dynamics. In this context, a theoretical reflection from the geography and sociology of tourism is required to understand the tourism of second homes and their socio-spatial dynamics.
