

An Approach to the Feelings to Violence and Social Movements: the Ayotzinapan Case

Ana María Fernández Poncela¹

Received: June 6, 2016

Accepted: August 3, 2017

Abstract:

To identify the feelings aroused by violence is the main goal of this text, as well as the feelings to certain social movements' product of this violence. The investigation is focused on the question: what people feel about these? And it is concentrated in the specification of that question to different social groups and places in Guerrero and Mexico City. So, the questions were around of: do people in general feel about the violence that takes place in the country? What do children feel in this respect? And in the case of social movements: What do youth participants feel in social movements protesting against the violence? The article primarily focuses in the case of the disappeared of Ayotzinapa (unsolved and very relevant) and the social movement that took place around the event occurred in 2014.

Key words: feelings, violence, movements, infants, youth, adults.

¹ Correo electrónico: fpam1721@correo.xoc.uam.mx