Abstract:

This paper focuses in the analysis of the intercultural relations that are formed between migrants from Central American and Mexico in their irregular migratory journey. It includes the study of the interactions in the southern and northern borders of Mexico and those in the city of Ocotlán, Jalisco. The main goal is to show how interculturality, seen as a concept and a practice, plays an important role in the reality of migration. From the experience in this process of human mobility, the criteria to create individual and collective identity strategies were made visible and its objective is to reflect on the intercultural communication that occurs along the crossing.
